WEEK 270: ALMOST TWINS
NOTEWORTHY NEWS FROM WILLS

How you doin'?

Hi y'all - it's your pen pal, Wills, here. Bet you were wondering why you didn't hear from me last week, and mebbe if I overdid the July 4 celebration! Well, I'm here to tell you that I'm still here, doin' well, and have a grrreat pair of kits to introduce to you.

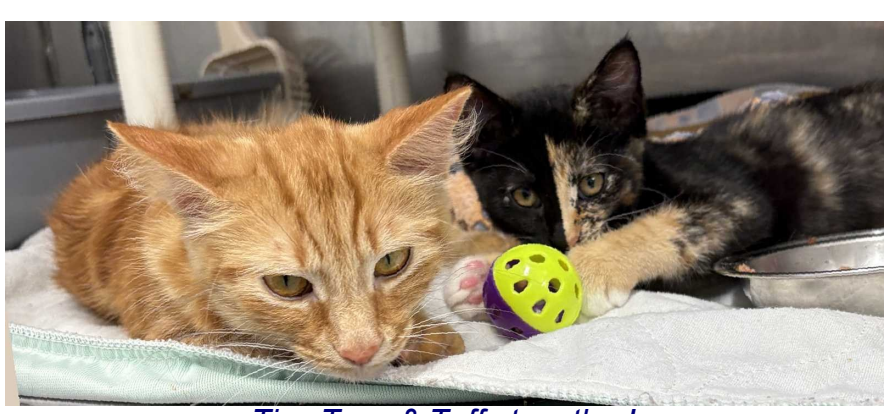

But first, I gotta tell you 'bout a grrreat adoption. Tiny Tess and her kit, Taffy, who just arrived last month, left the building last Saturday headed for their furrever home in Port Angeles. These two little kits (and I do mean little!) are real people cats, but are real picky 'bout the four-legged critters they associate with. Basically, they love each other, but don't really like to be 'round others of the feline persuasion, and especially don't do well with dogs. And they found their purrfect home for two! And just look at these cuties!

And now for the best part – y'all get to meet our COTW (that's Cats of the Week, in case y'all forgot!) Jango and Colby Jack weren't related, but I hafta say they could 'most be twins! They came from different parts of Forks, but arrived on the very same day! So naturally they spent lotsa time together gettin' all the stuff done that kits need to have done before they can go home! And they found out real fast that they had lots in common, so they became real grrreat friends.

Jango, the one-year-old, arrived at Safe Haven after his family took custody of a child who turned out to be real allergic to us kitties. Colby Jack, who is just over a year and a half old, was a stray who wandered up to a wedding venue in Forks. 'Member I said they could be twins? Well, the only differences you humans can prob'ly see is Jango's little beauty mark at the left of his nose, or Colby Jack's white front legs.

They're both real affectionate, energetic, and love to play. Which is pretty normal for youngsters. I'm pretty sure I was like that when I was 1 or 2 years young, like these guys. When people go in their playroom to visit them, they wait 'till the humans sit down, and then they are right on the go, jumpin' on visitors' laps, lookin' for cuddles and pets. And they're always runnin' around, lookin' for a new game or adventure. Visitors say they're quite entertaining. I vaguely 'member having that much energy, though it comes back to me when I smell chicken!

So like I said, these guys are real bonded and are lookin' for a home together. And if you'd like to meet them, just give us a call, make an appointment and come on down! And bring chicken when you come! (I'm only allowed a tiny little bit, but I AM the upstairs hall monitor, and y'all hafta go right past me to get downstairs to meet Colby Jack and Jango! Y'know what I'm sayin'?)

And speakin' of bringin' stuff, we have lotsa kittens in the shelter right now, and therefore have a super urgent, serious, extreme need for Fancy Feast kitten food … any flavor! These little guys are perpetual motion in action, and they use up lotsa energy and therefore need lotsa food! And we are runnin' real low on FF food (need I mention that's Fancy Feast?) So every little bit helps. Guess I could slip into my Demanding Wills role and say THE KITTENS NEED FOOD … BRING FOOD!

Thanks for listening!

p.s. Just wanted to remind y'all that today is the first day of Lavender Festival, and while all the streets are kinda wet from all the rain we've had, I have it on the best authority (at least, that's the best we can do) that the rest of the weekend will be pleasant—not warm, just pleasant—with virtually none of that nasty wet stuff coming down! So come on down and join us. We're in Booth 504, with lotsa purrfect products for sale. And 'member, the sale of our grrreat potholders and other super products, handmade by our fantastic Potholder Team, does a whole lot to care for all my four legged friends at PFOA!
